GORDON LAUNCHES ANONYMOUS WHISTLEBLOWER PORTAL FOR RI ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE

RHODE ISLAND — Rhode Island Attorney General candidate Alan Gordon today announced a new initiative inviting attorneys, support staff and members of the public who have firsthand knowledge of alleged wrongdoing within the Rhode Island Attorney General's Office to submit information anonymously through his campaign website.

The new portal, available at <https://alangordonri.com/anonymous-tip/>, does not require a submitter to provide a name, email address, or telephone number.

Gordon said the initiative is intended to give conscientious public employees and members of the public a way to bring forward information concerning alleged misconduct, abuse of authority, conflicts of interest, retaliation, misuse of public resources, improper political influence, evidence or case-handling concerns, or other wrongdoing.

"Just like Satan cannot cast out Satan, a Bar insider cannot reform the Bar. My allegiance is only to the US and Rhode Island Constitution and laws consistent with these and to the people of Rhode Island."

— Alan Gordon

RECENT INITIATIVES

Since his last press conference, Gordon has also rolled out several major initiatives addressing government neutrality, economic security and accountability. Among them are his Women's Wealth Building Initiative and his Neutrality Guarantee.

Women's Wealth Building Initiative — a proposal focused on building protected private capital and long-term financial security.

Neutrality Guarantee — a campaign proposal for an independent constitutional voice and complaint channel within the Attorney General's structure.

Gordon said the new anonymous reporting portal continues that broader effort by focusing directly on accountability within the office he is seeking to lead.

Gordon said employees who make lawful, protected disclosures should receive the full protection against retaliation provided by applicable whistleblower laws.

“This is not about encouraging rumor, political score-settling, or unsupported accusations. It is about giving honest people inside government an opportunity to tell the truth when they have firsthand knowledge of conduct the public has a right to know about.”

— Alan Gordon

The campaign is asking submitters to describe what they personally observed or learned, when it occurred, who or what offices were involved, and what records, witnesses, correspondence, or other evidence may exist to corroborate the report.

The campaign also cautions employees and other submitters not to disclose material they are legally prohibited from revealing, including attorney-client privileged information, protected grand-jury material, sealed records, or other information whose disclosure is restricted by law. The existence and scope of whistleblower protection depend upon the circumstances and applicable law.

Gordon said the broader purpose of the initiative is to ensure that concerns arising inside Rhode Island's chief law-enforcement office can be examined rather than suppressed because they involve powerful individuals or institutions.

“An Attorney General cannot demand accountability from everyone else while refusing accountability within the Attorney General's own office. The same law, the same evidentiary standards, and the same expectation of integrity must apply to everyone.”
